What is a Pop-Up Demonstration?

Pop-up projects inspire action, foster community identity and perpetuate the sorts of activities and improvements that make a street, neighborhood, town or city a better place to live, work & play.

Information shared by AARP & Team Better Block

Pop-up demonstration projects- also known as “tactical urbanism”, do-it-yourself urbanism” or better blocks”- typically involve community members working together to bring attention to overlooked spaces, address neighborhood issues, or demonstrate desired improvements within a public or sometimes private space such as a vacant building or underused lot. This can be done through a rapid prototyping process- a “pop-up demonstration”- that uses lighter, cheaper, easily available materials to build interventions that temporarily improve a space.

By seeing and doing, local leaders and residents can propel positive community change. After all, when it’s possible to illustrate a new idea through a temporary installation or demonstration, a proposed enhancement is better understood, supported and achieved.

The most common types of demonstrations are:

1. Traffic calming- a roadway’s design impacts the speed and flow of the vehicles that travel along it. To reduce speeds and increase safety for pedestrians, cyclists and motorists, the design often needs to change. A pop-up demonstration can show a community that it’s possible for a street to be both safe and efficient. A traffic calming pop-up project might use hay bales or plastic bollards to create a temporary roundabout or protected bike lane.
2. Connectivity- In placemaking, connectivity refers to how people access and move between the places they need or want to go. Where there are no marked crosswalks, colorful paint can create a visible, designated pathway where drivers stop and pedestrians proceed.
3. Public spaces- people need places to gather- or at least spend a bit of time in a space other than their own homes or yards. A pop-up “parklet” or small “pocket park” with seating can be easily installed in a parking spot or on a vacant plot. Creating environments that encourage social interaction can improve community cohesion.
