How to make smarter decisions

Shared by: nesslabs.com

The DECIDE framework of decision-making was designed in 2008 by Professor Kristina Guo and it's super simple to memorize and apply.

- Define the problem. Taking a step back to ensure you really understand the problem at hand should be the first priority when trying to make a decision.
- Establish the criteria. If you're about to purchase a piece of software, what are the criteria? Is it price, great support, ease of use? List all the factors you want to consider before making a decision.
- Consider the alternatives. Try to spend the right amount of time on this step. Too much time spent considering all the alternatives can drive to overthinking and analysis paralysis. Just make sure you have done enough research to have a few solid alternatives.
- Identify the best alternative. Weight the list of criteria you have created in the second step, and rate each of the alternatives. Then, compute the result to see which alternative makes most sense based on your criteria.
- Develop and implement a plan of action. Time to act on that decision. Especially if you have a maximizing thinking style, it's important to force yourself to not go back to the previous steps and to move forward with the decision.
- Evaluate the solution. In order to make better decisions over time, examine the outcomes and the feedback you get.

How to start a business when you have a full-time job

Shared by Starter Story

You come up with an idea, get all excited about it, and can't stop thinking about the product, the customers, how much to charge for it, etc.; but then... life happens. Starting a business can be a challenging and exciting journey, especially when you have a full-time job. It's super easy to get demotivated when you don't see any progress. Balancing the demands of your job and working on a new business can be difficult, but it's not impossible. With the right systems, you can effectively manage your time, resources, and energy to get your business off the ground. Here are a couple of ideas:

1. Take advantage of holidays and paid leaves to work on your idea
2. Work on what you already do. Seems obvious, but many people decide to do something completely different and unrelated to their full-time job. By doing that, you're leaving on the table your experience, knowledge, and connections. All super valuable assets and you should always consider leveraging them.
3. Create a plan
4. Become a survival master. When you reduce your income to work full time on a project that doesn't generate much revenue, you need to count every dollar three times.

Reminders for commercial districts...
 All the wonderful architecture enhancements and streetscape in the world will be wasted if buildings, streets and the public space between the street and building line are not clean and well-maintained. Show pride of place and set a high standard for maintenance and cleaning. Pick up litter regularly, empty trash cans when full. Sweep sidewalks, driveways and parking lots daily. While these activities don't automatically lead to direct sales, certainly their absence detracts from a wealth of positive activity.

What is diabetes?

Diabetes is when your blood glucose, also called blood sugar, is too high. Blood glucose is the main type of sugar found in your blood and your main source of energy. Glucose comes from the food you eat and is also made in your liver and muscles. Your blood carries glucose to all of your body's cells to use for energy.
